

ABSTRACT

A dynamic link library (DLL) in a computing device is provided in the form of a first part and an extension part. The first part has selected entry point ordinals
5 by which an application program may link to first functions. The application program may only link to further functions via the extension part of the DLL.